WOODSDALE - EDGWOOD NEIGHBORHOOD HISTORIC DISTRICT, WHEELING, WV OHIO CO.

The neighborhoods of Woodsdale and Edgwood began to be developed around 1888 when the farms of the area were divided into lots and families moved to the outskirts of Wheeling. What developed is a unique blend of residences, churches, and a few commercial buildings from 1888 to 1945. These buildings have maintained their integrity in massing, materials, and architectural details, retaining the historic character of the neighborhoods.

The boundaries of the Woodsdale-Edgwood Historic District include two noncontiguous areas bordering National Road. The first area is essentially from Park Road and Orchard Road along the northwest edge and following the north edge of the hillside along Edgwood and the side streets to Edgington Lane; and keeping to the hillside along View Street turning to the south along Carmel to Bae Mar Place. The line then borders the boundary of the National Road Corridor Historic District as it goes north along Lynwood to Elm Street, catching Echo Point Circle. The line then follows Pine Street to Bethany Pike and the south line of the Woodsdale Park to Park Road. The second area is to the west side of National Road from Lenox Avenue on the south to Memminger Avenue on the north and from Wheeling Creek to the west and bordering the boundaries of the National Road Corridor Historic District to the east.

The historic district is essentially flat with hillsides ringing the edges, and the rise along the National Road from Elm Street north to Heiskell Avenue. The streets have a residential appeal with trees along the streetscape, and houses have a setback from the street. Although there is a grid pattern to the streets, it is not a rigid pattern as some of the streets curve to interconnect, such as Edgwood, and Kenwood Place, or they have circular patterns, such as Echo Point Circle, and Hazlett Court. There are two small green space parks, with one in each neighborhood. In Edgwood there is a park bordered by North Park and South Park and intersected by Poplar Street. This green space has a large tree and small benches. A second small park is Woodsdale Park located along Bethany Pike. This park was created by deed from the Woods family as an added bonus to the residential lots along Park Road which face the park, for the residents use and enjoyment.

The architecture of the district encompasses many different styles from the late nineteenth century to the mid-twentieth century. The majority of the residences are in excellent condition with the original exterior facade material. In fact the street upon street of Shingle, Queen Anne, Tudor Revival, American Foursquare, Colonial Revival, and Bungalow styles make it one of the most intact residential districts in the state of West Virginia.

Less in evident are the few residences of the Italianate, Prairie style, Italian Renaissance, and one International style house. There are also four Lustron houses which are considered contributing, three of these sit next to each other on Edglawn Avenue and the corner of Edgwood Street, while the fourth is a few lots west on Edgwood. These c. 1947 homes are becoming recognized for their unique prefabricated enamel over steel panel facades.

Small business districts developed in some areas to serve the community, these can still be seen along Edgington Lane, and Heiskell Ave, with storefronts on the first floor of commercial buildings. Churches also sprang up with the Edgwood Christian Mission Alliance Church built on Edgwood Street in 1932, St. John's in 1913 on Heiskell Avenue, and with the Mt. Carmel Monastery being constructed on Carmel Drive in 1915. The Good Shepherd Home was also built on Edgington Lane in 1912, and first operated as a Catholic home for children before now being used as a nursing home. The neighborhood once had two large brick schools with Woodsdale School on Bethany Pike and Edgington School on Edgington Lane. The two original school buildings have been razed, and a new Woodsdale School was built next to the former site in 1976.

There have been several other large buildings in the district which are considered noncontributing, mainly because of their age. These would include the Peterson Hospital (1962), Temple Shalom (1957), and various apartment buildings throughout the district. Other noncontributing buildings have either been altered radically from their original massing, building materials have been drastically changed, or the buildings are less than 50 years of age.

The following is an alphabetical list of the buildings in the Woodsdale-Edgwood Historic District noting if they are contributing or noncontributing.

WOODSDALE - EDGWOOD NEIGHBORHOOD HISTORIC DISTRICT, WHEELING, WV OHIO CO.

The neighborhoods of Woodsdale and Edgwood were once part of large farms, situated beside the National Road. Beginning in the 1880s these farms began to be divided into lots as the City of Wheeling began its urban sprawl to the suburbs with the streetcar playing a role in the suburban development. An extraordinary variety of residences sprang up in Woodsdale and Edgwood, with the wide range of architectural styles making the area one of the best neighborhoods in the state. The Criterion being used is C for Architecture with the Period of Significance from 1888 to 1945.

Located on Wheeling's northeast side, Woodsdale was once the farm of the Woods family. Their farmland consisted of the area running east from Orchard Road to roughly Edgington Lane, and included a mill on Wheeling Creek. Archibald Woods fought briefly in the closing days of the Revolutionary War where he was wounded at Yorktown in 1781. Along with two of his brothers, he came to the banks of the Ohio River in 1783, and settled on land 3 miles east of there. Archibald was one of the delegates from Ohio County to vote on the constitution in 1789, and later was a bank director. Interested in real estate, Archibald once owned 60,000 acres with over 10,000 acres in Ohio County, and including acreage near Woodsfield, Ohio, a town which the family helped established in 1814. Some of these acres were from treasury land warrants.

Archibald Woods married Ann Pogue in 1789, and they moved into the home he had built in 1787, on the east side of a hillside surrounded by orchards. Later the street to their home was called Homestead Lane. The Woods would have seen the construction of the National Road from 1811 to 1818, which bisected their property, and the erection of an early tavern at the turn for Bethany Pike. Archibald Woods died in 1847, and the land went to his son Hamilton after the death of Ann (Jacob) Woods in 1856.

The Woods farm eventually passed to a younger son, John J. Woods, who married Ruth Jacob in 1848. The couple had four children - Archibald, Joseph J., George W., and Hamilton - and continued to reside on the old Home Farm which had roughly 670 acres. Although John Woods had sold portions of the farm, the bulk of the farm was divided and sold by his wife Ruth, and his sons, following the death of John in 1888. Land had been given specific lot numbers in Woodsdale by 1891, and by 1905 land called the "John Woods Home Farm" had also been given specific lot numbers.

Some consideration was given to the laying out of the avenues and streets which followed a rough grid pattern, given the hillsides. The naming of the streets played upon the family names, with Archibald Avenue and Hamilton Avenue named after two of the sons. "Woods" included streets named after trees such as Walnut, Poplar, Maple, Pine, Hawthorne, Birch, Locust, Linden, Laurel, and Elm, or was used in conjunction with a name such as Woodlawn, or Kenwood. The lane which cut through the family orchard was called Orchard Road, and the cow pasture on top of the hillside became Forest Park. The use of the word Echo was picked up because a call from a hillside was "echoed back" in the small valley. Other names were incorporated from early families such as Hazlett Court or Heiskell Avenue, or were derived from developers names like Bae-Mar from Baeden and Maurder. The family also played upon "edge of the woods" with names like Edgwood (the second "e" was dropped), and Edginton Lane.

Woodsdale Park was created by deed in 1891, with the eight lots on Park Road having an easement and use of the area across the creek as a private park for personal use. At the time the use of the park was an added bonus for the purchase of one of the lots. This pie-shaped park is bordered by Park Road and Bethany Pike, and is still a private park.

A farm bordering the Woods family, was John Reid's, which ran roughly from Edginton Lane south, to Arlington Drive. This encompasses much of the neighborhood now known as Edgwood. His home once stood where Altenheim is today and was known as "Uplands". In fact Howard's Place was once called Reid's Hill. Reid's farm was later divided by his daughter, Elizabeth Prather, in the 1890s.

There were a number of changes in Wheeling which encouraged the move to the suburbs. Wheeling had developed along the banks of the Ohio River, where there was almost a yearly flooding of Wheeling Island and the other neighborhoods. This situation was sharpened by the flood of 1884, which caused extensive damage, followed by a second heavy flood in 1888. This encouraged people to consider lots "out the pike" which were a distance from the river. The increasing industrial development along the Ohio River probably also prompted a move into the country.

It was the construction of a streetcar system, however, which led the way for development of the farms outside the city. The Wheeling - Elm Grove Railway had extended its tracks from downtown Wheeling into the country by 4 miles in 1876, reaching Bethany Pike. A year later the street car tracks were extended another two miles to Hornbrook Park, or today's Wheeling Park. The streetcar finally reached Elm Grove in 1879, which is about 7 miles from downtown Wheeling. This easy access into the city allowed residents to live in a country environment and commute to the city for work. As lots were developed the country environment developed into a continuous succession of suburban centers with Leatherwood, Woodsdale, Edgwood, Pleasant Valley and Park View.

The character of the neighborhoods has remained primarily residential, with some businesses locating on Edginton Lane and Carmel Road, and a few on Heiskell Avenue. These were probably originally family grocery stores, or shops offering services. Today's shops have similar functions, with groceries, restaurants, and clothing stores. The National Road also saw commercial development, and in Edgwood the two residential sections straddle the National Road Corridor Historic District and business area. Schools, and churches also moved to the area to serve the new population in the suburbs, and these structures add to the community feel of the neighborhood.

The contributing buildings in the historic district range in age from the 1880s to the mid-1940s with a vast variety of architectural styles. A few of the homes which belonged to the immediate Woods family and date to the late 1880s are on Hamilton Street. These are either Shingle in style or are large Queen Anne or Colonial Revival residences. As lots were platted off after the turn of the century, the popular styles were either Queen Anne, or Colonial Revival. These were followed in the early 1920s by Tudor Revival, and Bungalows, some exhibiting a Craftsman influence.

There are a number of homes designed by Wheeling architects such as Edward Franzheim, Fredrick Faris and George Petticord who worked throughout this early period of development from 1900 - 1940. Franzheim had a variety of designs which he used but seems to be known for those which exhibited a Mediterranean influence, and had a low horizontal stucco facade. He is attributed with one stuccoed International Style home on Hawthorne Court. A former partner of Franzheim, was Fredrick Faris who designed a number of Shingle style homes, but showed a southwest influence with his Mission Style for the Mount Carmel Monastery on Carmel Road. George Petticord designed a number of the residences throughout Woodsdale and Edgwood as well as many on Lynwood Avenue and Birch Avenue. His style for residences seem to have a variety of features on the facades with bays and gables having a irregular pattern, plus unusual window openings. Petticord also designed a number of apartment buildings throughout the area including Metz Terrace on Birch Avenue.

Many small cottages reworking the popular Tudor Revival styles or Cape Cods, were built in the late 1930s and early 1940s on smaller lots in Woodsdale and Edgwood. Between 1946 and 1950, the Lustron Home, a popular pre-fabricated metal home, was marketed in response to the post World War II housing shortage. These homes were sold throughout the Ohio County area with Woodsdale having a small concentration of four homes within a one block area. It has been established through survey documentation that Ohio County has the largest concentration of Lustron Homes in West Virginia, with twelve homes still in evidence. While less than 50 years in age, the Lustron Home is the last significant architectural type constructed in the neighborhood, and has exceptional significance. The Lustron Corporation constructed less than 2500 homes in the United States, with the structures consisting of exterior and interior steel wall-framing sections bolted to the foundation and to steel roof trusses. The exterior and interior walls were covered with interlocking steel panels with a baked enamel finish. The four Lustron homes are in excellent condition, and have not been significantly altered from their original design. There is one home on Edgwood Street which also features a Lustron garage, a one bay gable roof building.

Woodsdale and Edgwood has continued to be a popular residential area with the larger lots continuing to be subdivided into small lots for newer housing. Many of these homes are noncontributing at this time and are so noted in the text.

The Woodsdale-Edgwood Neighborhood Historic District is an excellent example of the late 19th and early 20th century residential architecture. The medley of architectural styles flow throughout the neighborhood creating a rich blend of homes. The district is one of the most intact streetcar suburb neighborhoods in the state of West Virginia exhibiting a high integrity of materials and design.

Boundary Description

The area encompasses two noncontiguous areas bordering National Road in Wheeling:

Area 1: Begins at Park Road and Orchard Road and runs along the northwest edge following the north edge of the hillside along Edgwood and the side streets to Edgington Lane; thence along the hillside by View Street turning south along Carmel Road to Bae-Mar Place. The line then borders the east boundary of the National Road Corridor Historic District north along Lynwood Avenue to Elm Street, including Echo Point Circle. The line then follows Pine Street to Bethany Pike and the south line of the Woodsdale Park to Park Road.

Area 2: Borders the west side of the National Road Corridor Historic District running from Lenox Avenue north to the north property lines of America Avenue; thence west to Pavilack and Memminger Avenue following the north property lines to Wheeling Creek; thence following the line of Wheeling Creek (which are the rear property lines) to the south property line of the homes on Lenox Avenue; thence west to National Road.

Boundary Justification

The area associated with the Woodsdale-Edgwood Neighborhood was previously dissected by the National Road Corridor Historic District in 1993. The discontinuous boundaries in the nomination unite the two closely related neighborhoods, and enclose on two sides the National Road Corridor (from Bethany Pike to Bel-Mar Avenue) which are firmly recognized as one area by the local residents.
